Biography

Dr. Nina Kao Hsiao-Ling is the CEO of the Overseas Medical Mission Center at Changhua Christian Hospital (CCH), Taiwan, and a consultant to the Taiwan Hospital Association. With extensive experience in international development and global health collaboration, she has played a key role in advancing Taiwan's medical diplomacy and healthcare partnerships worldwide. Dr. Kao holds a PhD from National Taiwan University and completed executive programs at Northwestern University's Kellogg School of Management and the National University of Singapore. She previously served in senior leadership roles at Taiwan's International Cooperation and Development Fund (ICDF), overseeing international technical cooperation programs. Dr. Kao is also a Steering Committee member of the International Hospital Federation's i-to-i Innovation Hub and an assistant professor at National Chung Hsing University. Her work focuses on global health cooperation, healthcare capacity building, and international medical mission initiatives.

About the Organization

Changhua Christian Hospital (CCH) was founded by English Rev. C. Campbell Moody and Dr. David Landsborough III in 1896. For over a century, CCH has been inspired by the love and saving grace of Jesus Christ, committed to medical care, evangelism, social service, education, and research. CCH is central Taiwan's most historical medical center, with over 4,000 ward beds and over 8,500 employees serving in 9 branches. In the face of sweeping changes in medical technology and the healthcare environment, CCH built the first intelligent and green hospital in Asia to facilitate workflow efficiency and an integrated healthcare system to deliver advanced but safe health services. CCH was accredited as an "Excellent Hospital" by the Department of Health since 2007 and was accredited by Joint Commission International (JCI) since 2008. Upholding the spirit of Jesus Christ's selfless dedication and humble service, CCH continually strives for innovative medical research and outstanding medical quality to provide comprehensive care to our patients.
